Beginning of Film

Lumière Brothers

<https://vimeo.com/172091504> (Qui a inventé le cinéma?)

Invented a Cinématographe which was a movie camera for the time (1895). Thomas Edison had something, but not as fast and easy to use.

First French Films

Georges Méliès and The Trip to the Moon

Film was complex and the longest at the time!

Described as the first SCI FI movies

It was lost and rediscovered in late 1920s.

Edison had acquired it (02') and made money in the US and Georges did not get any.

Some behind the scenes...

Some costumes were made from cardboard and canvas

Melies created the head, feet and kneecap pieces from clay, then plaster, then cardboard

He used “substitution slice” which had things appearing or changing into other things.

The space capsule was a cardboard cut-out on a string with an aquarium in the background.

200 people were hired to hand-paint the cells.

La Belle et la bête by Jean Cocteau (1946)

- It was the first feature-length adaptation of the classic fairy tale and the first with sound
The harsh post-war conditions made it impossible to shoot the film in color.
- Jean Marais spent five hours in the makeup chair every morning to transform into the Beast. Body parts were covered in animal hair (if the costume didn't cover them)
- When he put in the fangs he couldn't remove them or eat anything but mush.
- Marais wanted the head of a stag-they thought it would have been too funny
- They modeled it from various carnivores to be more threatening
- The mask was made of a webbing woven with animal hair in 3 parts allowing him to move his face
- The shape and coloring of the animal hair was partly inspired by Marais's dog, who went with him on visits to test the make-up.

Le Ballon Rouge (1956)

The Red Balloon is a classic French movie. Directed by Albert Lamorisse, his son
Pascal played the main character and his daughter played in the film as well.

It won a Palme d'Or Award for short films at the Cannes Film Festival in 1956.

La Nouvelle Vague: The French New Wave

1958-late 60s

The New Wave was a French movement in film that broke boundaries with editing. They wanted to be different than other movies before by using new techniques such as the jump-cut. They used it to make the audience aware they were watching a film. They also used Caméra Stylo: the director would be as the author (auteur) of the film and use their camera as a writer would a pen.

They would also move the camera as opposed to leaving it still. (panning and tracking) This opens up the scene.

The New Wave Directors

François Truffaut, Jean-Luc Godard, Éric Rohmer, Claude Chabrol, and Jacques Rivette were famous directors who began this movement.

400 Coups is one of those famous movies.
